Alberta's Official Opposition announces new communications director

Edmonton – The Alberta Liberal Caucus today announced the appointment of Brian Leadbetter as its new Director of Communications.

“We’re incredibly pleased to welcome Brian to our caucus management team,” said Alberta Liberal Leader David Swann.

“Brian brings a strong mix of practical experience and strategic insight in communications, media relations and stakeholder engagement that will serve our caucus well in communicating our vision for Alberta to the public,” commented Alberta Liberal Caucus Chief of Staff Rick Miller.

Most recently, Leadbetter has managed a communications and government relations practice in Edmonton. Prior to his consulting career, he served as Director of Government and Community Relations with Northlands, managing a portfolio that included corporate communications, government relations, community relations and volunteer services. He also brings senior level experience as a former communications advisor to Edmonton’s City Council to his new position.

He holds a Bachelor of Arts degree (Honours) from Saint Mary’s University and a Master’s degree in Political Science from Dalhousie University in Halifax.

The Alberta Liberal Caucus... There’s a better way.
